ABSTRACT

Archives for the American Council on Education (ACE) since its inception in 1918 until 1977 are presented. The permanent, noncurrent records document the various goals, programs, and accomplishments of the Council. This descriptive inventory provides the ACE membership and staff and interested researchers a means to examine historical information of one of the pre-eminent institutions in higher education. Because of the ACE's central role in directing American higher education over the last 60 years, a brief historical sketch of significant events documented in the archives is presented. The archives are arranged as they were created and maintained by the various parts of the Council. Because of a small staff during its early existence, only one central organizational file was created and maintained. This alphabetically arranged file was under the direct control of the chief executive officer of the Council. Because the Council operated on a fiscal year of July 1 to June 30, the files were cut at that time period. In order to assist the researcher, subject folder titles have been added and these are listed in the guide under the appropriate entry and box number. It was not until 1951 that the Council adopted a calendar year basis for its filing system. The records of the various presidents, with one exception, are divided into two series, general records and records of ACE commissions and committees. In order to assist the user, descriptive paragraphs have been added where organizations are concerned. Because much of the activities of the Council took place through commissions and committees, over half of the total volume of the archives is within this type of record. (SW)

Introduction

During a blizzard in Chicago in January 1918, four educators representing professional associations deliberated on how to best meet the wartime needs of American higher education. Before World War I was over, these four educators were joined by others and the Emergency Council on Education was created. This fledgling organization, with an annual budget of two thousand dollars, soon shed its wartime nature and changed its name to the American Council on Education. From 1918, ACE has steadily increased in size and stature in American higher education.

How ACE became one of the pre-eminent institutions in higher education during its history is reflected in its archives. This aggregate of the permanent, noncurrent records documents the various goals, programs and accomplishments of the Council between 1918 and 1977. Just as the Council had dropped its transitory name in 1918, to one more appropriate for a permanent organization, an archives of an organization does not include all the records created or received by it during its existence. Most records of an organization are of a temporary nature and, once their current use is over, can be destroyed because the purpose for their existence is satisfied. During the arrangement and description project just concluded, records of a noncurrent nature were appraised as to their value and either blessed as archives or destroyed. Over half of the records accumulated by the Council were either duplicates, publications, or simply not judged to be of permanent value.

This descriptive inventory of the ACE Archives provides the membership of the Council, the staff of the Council, and interested researchers, a means to use the almost three hundred linear feet of permanent records constituting the archives. Because of the Council's central role in directing American higher education over the last sixty years, a brief historical sketch of significant events documented in the archives follows. This is by no means intensive or extensive and is meant only to highlight some of the educational issues ACE and its members have faced in the twentieth century.

World War I not only thrust the United States into a leadership position in world affairs but also brought ot the lack of vocational education training and universal military training in the United States. These issues, as well as the exchange of students between American and foreign educational institutions in Europe, occupied the Council. Because the institution was the central coordinating organization of other educational associations and individual members, building a membership and remaining financially sound were vital activities and occupied a great amount of energy of Donald J. Cowling and Samuel P. Capen, the first two directors of the Council. As chief executives of the Council, these two individuals felt it their responsibility for reporting to the membership proposed higher education legislation. Capen, as the second director, established a quarterly publication, the Educational Record in 1920, in order to report to the Council membership pertinent issues and activities. This publication has served a vital need in higher education, and for over fifty years has summarized the activities of the committees and commissions of ACE. From its early history to the present, committees and commissions have been central to the accomplishments of the Council. Because the commissions and committees created and maintained their records separate from the records of the Office of the Director, they are retained in that manner in the ACE Archives. The records of commissions and committees created during the tenure of Cowling were not broken in 1919 when Capen became director and can be located in the office records of the latter.

The quantity of records created during the tenures of Cowling and Capen is quite small, however that is not unusual when considerations are made for a Council staff of one or two employees. In addition, much of the correspondence of committee members would be maintained among the papers of these university administrators and professors.

If Cowling and Capen were the copilots in getting the Council off the ground, the third director of the organization was responsible for guiding it through its first decade of growth. Charles Riborg Mann directed the Council between 1922 and 1934. Mann reflected his times when he opposed federal funding for higher education. Just as strongly, he promoted the use of standardized testing by use of a standardized psychological test. In 1927 this test was administered to 64,000 freshmen in 188 colleges and universities. Over the next fifty years, the diagnostic value of this examination as an addition to secondary school grades became standard in American education. During his tenure the Council began publishing what today is the Handbook of American Colleges and Universities. Not all efforts of the Council ended in success. The chair of the Committee on Federal Relations reported in 1925 that seven years of efforts to promote the creation of a Federal Department of Education was unsuccessful. The committee reported "the termination of the 68th Congress and thank God." In April 1929, President Herbert Hoover established the National Advisory Committee on Education and named Mann as chairman. Four other members of the Executive Committee of the Council were appointed to this presidential committee. Much of the committee's activities can be followed in the archives of the Council.

When Director Mann resigned in 1934, the former U.S. Commissioner of Education, George F. Zook, was appointed executive. With membership of the Council declining because of the depression, Zook and the Executive Committee reduced Council dues from $100 to $50. Also the Constitution was amended to rename the chief executive the president rather than the director.

In 1936, the Council announced the formation of the American Youth Commission and elected former Secretary of War Newton D. Baker as chairman. During most of the depression, about four out of ten unemployed workers were American youth. The records of the Commission document noteworthy achievements of the commission in relating to the harsh realities faced by American youth. Such Council publications as Growing Up in the Black Belt and Youth and the Future had a significant impact on how Americans viewed their youth.

Anticipating wartime needs, the Council began publication of Higher Education and National Defense in 1940. Later, this publication was renamed Higher Education and National Affairs and is prominent today in the literature of higher education. During World War II the Council was frustrated because no overall higher education plan met the approval of the War Department. In various ways the Council and its new Committee on Relationship of Higher Education to the Federal Government cooperated with government agencies. The government request to conserve paper reduced the size of the Educational Record and the amount of records created by the Council. Remembering that many colleges and universities granted blanket credit for military experience in World War I, the Council published 50,000 copies of a pamphlet, Sound Educational Credit for Military Experience. At the conclusion of the war, the Council established the Veterans Testing Service which was later renamed the General Educational Development Testing Service. During its existence the Service tested almost three million adults.

In 1945 and 1946, Dr. Zook's efforts to promote international education and cultural exchange were successful as he and other educators attended the San Francisco Conference. This influence can be seen in the Charter of the United Nations. Zook was also named program chairman of the United States National Commission for UNESCO and continued to campaign for cultural exchange programs. Also in 1946, Zook was named by President Truman as chairman of the President's Commission on Higher Education. Various committees of the Council examined the need for higher education assistance to those returning from the armed services. A special committee was established to study the problems of the more than 123,000 disabled American veterans enrolled on college campuses. A special Council sampling survey of housing for veterans attending classes was performed.

Upon Zook's retirement in 1950, the American Council on Education moved to its new headquarters and received its new president, Arthur S. Adams. Because of the Korean Conflict, the manpower question occupied the attention of the Council. A special conference on the role of women in the mobilization of human resources was sponsored in New York City. The Executive Committee again voiced objection to a proposed universal military training program then before Congress.

Major concerns of higher education during the McCarthy Era were the questions of academic freedom and national security. In 1953, the Educational Record published two articles describing infringements on academic freedom at Rutgers and Harvard. The Council held two special conferences on the questions of academic freedom and national security. A new Commission on the Education of Women was launched by the Council in 1953.

As the Council staff increased in the 1950s, the need for a Council library became evident. In 1956 a small staff library was opened with a contribution of $450.

Spurred by the Russian launching of Sputnik, the Council published A Proposed Program of Federal Action to Strengthen Higher Education in the Service of the Nation. The Council stressed that the nation should improve and strengthen our educational system rather than imitate the Russian model.

The Council's Problems and Policies Committee followed by distributing 130,000 copies of their study, Public Understanding and Support of Higher Education. By the 1960s, the professional staff of the Council had expanded and offered the membership more institutional research capability and expertise.

In 1961 the new president, Logan Wilson, made substantive changes in the organizational structure of the Council. Wilson's goal was to have a small staff of professionals assigned to major areas of Council interest. These Council offices or divisions were assisted by advisory committees or commissions representing the wide spectrum of Council membership. Within this organizational framework a large number of leaders of American higher education were involved in Council activities. In addition, a publications department and a department of research and analysis were established in the 1960s as service oriented components of the Council. Although new divisions or operations were created and others expanded or reduced in size, the basic organizational structure introduced by Wilson still stands. From the 1960s, the Council, and higher education in general, has paid greater attention to the Federal government's impact on higher education. Today, almost all operating units of the Council are aware of the influence of government in the higher education enterprise.

Logan Wilson's talents stretched far beyond organizational management. He brought about creation of a Committee of Educational Opportunity which addressed the need for greater opportunities for Blacks in higher education. Wilson and other members of the Board also directed the Council to look at the urban scene in the 1960s. In that same area, ACE influenced the Higher Education Act of 1965 by urging direct financial assistance for needy and able students. These came to be known as "opportunity grants." In 1969 the ACE Annual Meeting theme, "The Campus and Racial Tension," was proposed by the staff director of the Office of Research. During this period, the Commission on Academic Affairs published ACE Special Reports relating to the needs of Black America.

Despite the ferment in the 1960s on American campuses, overseas assistance to newly established African educational institutions was carried out through the Council's Africa Liaison Committee, established in 1959. Most of the committee's early efforts were directed toward Sub-Sahara Africa. In 1965 the committee was renamed the Overseas Liaison Committee and expanded its activities into the Caribbean and Pacific Ocean areas. The activities and accomplishments in assisting educational institutions in these areas are fully documented in the records of the committee.

After a decade of service as president of the Council, Logan Wilson was succeeded in 1972 by Roger W. Heyns. The new president focused on Federal legislation affecting higher education and in achieving a better representation of institutional interests on the Board of the Council. Following intensive study, the Board was expanded to include six new members. Also, to cope with the growing demands of relating higher education and the Federal government, Stephen K. Bailey was appointed vice-president in charge of all Council activities in governmental relations. The Council interaction with government was evidenced by the presentation of 27 oral or written statements to congressional committees or Federal agencies during 1973. Thus, under the leadership of Heyns and Bailey, ACE became more the leader and voice for higher education when new legislation was being considered. The Council staff became more conversant with legislative staffs and provided expertise when needed. When Heyns resigned on May 31, 1977, Bailey became acting president for three months until a successor, J. W. Peltason, assumed the chief executive's position.

It appears that by both the volume and complexity of Council records pertaining to governmental relations, the ACE has assumed the vital role of articulating and promoting the interests of higher education in the legislative arena.

This historical sketch, although providing some idea of the documentation available in the archives, is no substitute for a careful study of the descriptive guide to the ACE Archives, 1918-1977.

The Archives

The archives are arranged as they were created and maintained by the various parts of the Council. Because of such a small staff during its early existence, only one central organizational file was created and maintained. This alphabetically arranged file was under the direct control of the chief executive officer of the Council. Because the Council operated on a fiscal year of July 1 to June 30, the files were cut at that time period. In order to assist the researcher, subject folder titles have been added and these are listed in the guide under the appropriate entry and box number. It was not until 1951 that the Council adopted a calendar year basis for its filing system.

The records of the various presidents (with the exception of President Cowling) are divided into two series, general records and records of ACE commissions and committees. In order to assist the user, descriptive paragraphs have been added where organizations are concerned. Because much of the activities of the Council took place through commissions and committees, over half of the total volume of the archives is within this type of record.

The archives of the Council are almost all textual but a small collection of photographs and some audio-tapes are described in a special section of the guide. No machine-readable archival documents for the pre-1978 period were located.

In addition, Council personnel and budget records are not a part of the archives and are available for use only with special permission. Interested users of these records should contact Judith A. Pfeiffer, Director, Higher Education Policy and Administration Library and Information Service, One Dupont Circle, Washington, D.C. 20036.

Certain types of records transcend the entire history of the Council and therefore they are not a part of any one president's files and have been described at the beginning of the guide.

The guide format has been designed with the researcher in mind. The informational content is on the left margin, the date span in the middle, and the entry number, box number, and folder number on the extreme right side of the page.

Longtime Council staff member Charles G. Dobbins, because of his constant use of ACE records, advocated the establishment of an archives. It remained for President J. W. Peltason to encourage and support the creation of the ACE Archives. The appraisal, arrangement, and description of these records was made possible by grants from the National Endowment for the Humanities and the W. K. Kellogg Foundation. In addition, President Peltason and other Council staff afforded us every assistance during the project. The project staff also wish to recognize Dr. Herman Viola and Mr. E. Jeffrey Stann of the Smithsonian Institution, Dr. Thomas M. Stauffer, Director, Division of External Relations, ACE, and Mr. Raymond M. Morrison for their valuable assistance during this project. I especially wish to thank Ms. Judith A. Pfeiffer, Director, Higher Education Policy and Administration Library and Information Service of ACE, who served as project director during the entire project. The success of this project depended primarily on the skill and industry of Ms. Linda J. Ebben. The entire archives was arranged and described by her during the past fifteen months. Without Ms. Ebben the crates and boxes of records scattered in various buildings would not have been transformed into the ACE Archives.

MINUTES OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE AMERICAN COUNCIL ON EDUCATION, 1919-1977	1	1-24

Because these records were created by the highest governing body of the Council, they provide important policy-making information. There are frequent gaps in the early records and some of the pre-World War II records in this series consist of minutes of the Executive Committee of the Council. After that date most of the documentation consists of minutes of the Board and budget and policy matters presented by the president for consideration.

RECORDS OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE AMERICAN COUNCIL ON EDUCATION, 1919-1976	2	1-25

Throughout the history of the Council, the Executive Committee functioned as the Board when the latter did not meet. Many important decisions were made by this committee, which was smaller and met more often than the Board. The composition varied during the history of the Council but the officers of the Board and a few key Board members made up the committee. Information concerning significant events in the affairs of the Council can be located in these records.

PUBLISHED ANNUAL REPORTS OF THE AMERICAN COUNCIL ON EDUCATION, 1920-1977	3	59 volumes

Starting in 1920, the Educational Record, the first and foremost periodical of the Council, began publishing the previous year's annual report. Thus, from 1920-1961, the annual report and annual meeting information can be found in this publication. Starting in 1962, the Council published the Annual Report as a separate publication. If used carefully the annual reports of the Council can serve as a finding aid to more extensive information on subjects found in the ACE Archives.

In April 1929, President Herbert Hoover commissioned the National Advisory Committee on Education to evaluate the role of the federal government in education. The two-year study, administered by the American Council on Education, published its findings in a two-part report in 1931.

In May 1930, a new committee of the American Council on Education was formed, the Problems and Plans Committee. According to the Educational Record, July 1932, the undertaking is nothing less than a survey of the whole field of education for the purpose of identifying the most fundamental problems relating to the development of human beings, to the special demands of the modern environment, and to institutional methods; and for the further purpose of planning a series of related investigations designed to throw light on these problems.

The July 1945 Educational Record reports the name change to the Problems and Policies Committee, indicative of a growing feeling that this committee should concern itself not only with the consideration of major problems in American education, but also with the preparation of pronouncements on the solution of selected issues from time to time.

COMMISSIONS AND COMMITTEES OF ACE, 1934-50		10
Advisory Committee on Motion Pictures on Education	1935		1	1

The Advisory Committee on Motion Pictures on Education, formed in 1935 and soon known as the Committee on Motion Pictures on Education, was to serve as a national clearinghouse to promote the use of motion pictures in organized education. The committee was to catalog educational films available, prepare bibliographies of pertinent books and periodicals, and devise plans for classroom implementation of such materials. From 1943 to 1947 it was known as the Committee on Visual Aids. In 1947 it became inactive.

The Cooperative Test Service of the American Council on Education was founded October 1930 to supply colleges and schools with measuring instruments to weigh defined achievements. Originally the CTS was a subcommittee of the Problems and Plans Committee; later it was a subcommittee of the Central Committee on Personnel Methods. This Central Committee was later renamed the Committee on Measurement and Guidance. With the transfer of functions to the Educational Testing Service, the Measurement and Guidance committee was phased out.

In a November 1, 1946, letter, Helen C. Hurley, assistant to the president of the American Council on Education, writes concerning the Committee on Accreditation of Experiences in the Armed Forces:

> In the early days of World War II, the American Council on Education and the National Association of Secondary School Principals began working in cooperation with the United States Armed Forces Institute to develop procedures which would allow for sound evaluation of a serviceman's military experience.

Later the name was changed to Office on Educational Credit, Military Evaluations Program. Today it is known as Office on Educational Credit and Credentials, Military Evaluations Program. The program continues as a vital part of ACE.

AMERICAN YOUTH COMMISSION, 1933-44		11

The American Youth Commission of the American Council on Education was formed in 1935 to conduct a nation-wide study of the problems of American youth. The Commission evaluated existing educational programs to determine where improvement was necessary to accommodate societal changes.

Records of the Office of President Zook, 1932-1950

Factors taken into account included increased leisure time, advanced technology in areas such as transportation, radio and motion pictures, employment opportunities and the apparent decline in the overall value system. The special needs of at least three groups were considered; those of rural youth, Negro youth and delinquents. The American Youth Commission study was one of the most significant undertakings of the American Council on Education.

A series of publications resulted from the work of the American Youth Commission. The out-of-print books and articles may be found in the historical publications section of the ACE Library.

COMMISSIONS AND COMMITTEES OF ACE, 1949-61		14

To insure a smooth administrative transition, Arthur S. Adams transferred a small amount of Commissions and Committees materials from the records of George F. Zook for the years 1949-50.

		Entry	Boxes	Folders
Commission on Education and International Affairs	1949-57		1	1
Commission on a Survey of Dentistry	1951			2
Administrative Committee of the Cooperative Study of Secondary School Standards	1951			3
Advisory Committee on Policy on Washington International Center	1950-51			4-5

The Washington International Center opened in 1950 to provide an orientation to America for visiting scholars, specialists and dignataries from around the world. The American Council on Education monitored the Center through an Advisory Committee. In July 1961 ACE terminated its relationship when the newly incorporated Meridian House Foundation assumed the Center's administration.

Committee on Japanese Counseling Institutes	1951			4-5

For several years in the early 1950s Japanese higher education administrators cooperated with American student personnel specialists to develop counseling services for the Japanese. Teams of Americans visited in Japan to observe and advise. One group visited for a year; another for several months. Lack of funding curtailed the project.

AFRICA LIAISON COMMITTEE, 1959-1966/ OVERSEAS LIAISON COMMITTEE, 1966-	18

The Africa Liaison Committee/Overseas Liaison Committee maintained two types of files for its records: general and geographic. The folders are labeled Africa Liaison Committee from 1959 through June 30, 1966; the Overseas Liaison Committee from July 1, 1966 on, for both general and geographic files.

The general records, which appear first in this entry, are broken each year, and are arranged alphabetically within each year. The second type of file, geographic, is arranged first by broad geographic area, second by country and by city, where known, and third by name of university or college. For example: East Africa, Kampala, Uganda, University of East Africa. Each broad geographic area is arranged alphabetically with any subdivision of Africa always appearing first. For example, East Africa and Southern Africa both appear before Far East.
